DOES SHE REALLY LIKE YOU?

7 signs a Thai woman is genuinely into you, and 3 that mean she's only being polite.

Thai women almost never say it straight out. They show it. Tick the boxes as you go, whether you've just started chatting, had a first date or you're already seeing each other.

SEVEN SIGNS. TICK WHAT YOU'VE SEEN.

A Thai woman is raised not to put her feelings on the table. So she shows them in small, everyday ways most foreign men walk straight past. Four or more ticks and she's interested. Five or more and she's serious.

1

She asks if you've eaten.

"Gin khao reu yang?" Have you eaten yet? It's how Thais say "I'm thinking about you". If she asks every day, sends photos of her lunch or turns up with food, you're on her mind.

What to do: answer properly, send a photo back and ask about hers. Never brush it off as small talk. It isn't.

2

She messages you first.

Good morning before you've woken up. Goodnight before she sleeps. A photo of the rain, the traffic or her cat for no reason at all. A woman who's only being polite answers. She never starts.

What to do: match her rhythm, not more. Keep it light and warm. Ten messages to her two looks needy in any language.

3

She worries about you.

"Drive slowly." "Take your medicine." "Don't drink too much tonight." "Did you get home?" Thai women show care by fussing over the small things.

What to do: let her. Say thank you and tell her when you're home. Brushing it off with "I'm a grown man" tells her you don't want her care.

4

She's happy to be seen with you in daylight.

Lunch near her work, the mall on a Saturday, a walk where people know her. A woman who only meets you late at night, far from her own area, is keeping you out of her real life.

What to do: walk beside her, never ahead, and keep the affection gentle in public. You're being judged by everyone she knows.

5

She introduces you to her friends.

Often she'll bring a friend to an early date. That's not a third wheel. That's her best friend checking you out, and her opinion counts more than yours.

What to do: charm the friend. Pay the bill without fuss, ask the friend questions, and don't flirt with her. The report goes back that night.

6

She gets a little jealous, then goes quiet.

Thais call it ngon: a short sulk that wants you to notice and fix it. "Who's that girl in your photo?" followed by silence means she cares. Indifference would be worse.

What to do: don't argue and don't tease. Reassure her calmly, then do something kind. She wants to see you notice.

7

Her family starts asking about you.

"My mum asked if you like Thai food." A Thai woman doesn't mention a man to her family on a whim. Once they know your name, she's already pictured you at the table.

What to do: send a respectful hello, learn one polite phrase and ask what her mother likes. You're being weighed up, and that's a good thing.

THREE SIGNS SHE'S ONLY BEING POLITE

Thai manners can look a lot like interest. A woman raised on kreng jai (never making anyone feel awkward) will smile, reply and say yes long after she's lost interest. These three tell you the truth.

"Up to you." Every single time.

Where to eat, when to meet, what to do: she never suggests anything and never makes a plan of her own. A woman who wants to see you will find a way. One who doesn't lets you do all the work.

What to do: offer two clear choices ("Thursday or Saturday?"). If she still won't pick, she's being polite. Step back and let her come to you.

Replies that keep shrinking.

Paragraphs turn into sentences, then "ok ka", "555" and a sticker. She answers hours later and never asks you a question back. That's a Thai woman letting you down gently, without ever saying no.

What to do: don't chase and don't ask "Is something wrong?" three times. Send one warm message, then go quiet for a few days. Interest comes back. Politeness doesn't.

3

She's warmest when there's a bill.

Sweet when you're paying, distant when you're not. Late-night meetings only, always somewhere expensive, and talk of money problems before she knows your surname.

What to do: keep paying for dates, which is normal in Thailand, and send no money for anything else. If the warmth disappears with the cash, you have your answer.

Ticked two warning signs? She isn't saying no, because she never will. But she's telling you. Save your time, your money and your pride for a woman who ticks the green boxes.

WHAT SHE'LL NEVER TELL YOU

The signs tell you she's interested. What you do next decides whether it goes anywhere. That part is in the Playbook.

-  30 first messages that get replies
-  Where to meet women who aren't working the bars
-  Her family, sin sod and money: what's normal
-  The 11 bedroom rules she'll never explain
-  The 10 red flags behind every Thai heartbreak

SHE LIKES YOU. NOW WHAT?

Most foreign men lose a Thai woman after she's already interested. Not because she stops liking them, but because they break a rule nobody told them about. A joke in front of her friends. A hand in the wrong place in front of her mother. One message too many. She'll never explain what went wrong. She'll just drift away.

Keep this checklist. Run through it again after your third date and again after a month. The signs change as she does, and the boxes that are still empty tell you exactly where you stand.

Every woman is different, and none of these signs is a promise on its own. Look for the pattern, not a single tick. This checklist is about dating, manners and culture, and it covers adults only.
